Deutsches U-Boot Typ XXI mit Interieur

Mit dem Typ XXI besaß Deutschland Anfang 1945 das fortschrittlichste U-Boot der damaligen Welt. Durch zahlreiche technische Neuerungen konnte es unbeschränkt unter Wasser fahren, da die Dieselmotoren die benötigte Frischluft durch einen speziellen Schnorchel ansaugten. Die für Unterwasserfahrten entworfene Linienform und eine dreifach größere Batteriekapazität ergaben eine sensationelle Unterwassergeschwindigkeit von 17 Knoten. Weitere Neuerungen waren geräuscharme Elektromotoren für Schleichfahrten, hochempfindliche Ortungsgeräte und 2 cm Flakgeschütztürme. Nach kurzer Ausbildungsfahrt wurde U2540 am 04.05.1945 von der Besatzung in der Flensburger Förde versenkt. 1957 wieder gehoben, diente es der Bundesmarine als Erprobungsboot „Wilhelm Bauer“. Heute kann U2540 als Museumsboot besichtigt werden.

German Submarine Type XXI with interior

At the beginning of 1945 with the type XXI Germany had the most advanced submarine in the world at that time. Due to numerous technical innovations it was capable of unlimited underwater travel as the diesel engines drew in the necessary fresh air through a special snorkel. It had a linear shape designed for submarine travel and its battery capacity was three times greater, giving it a sensational speed of 17 knots. Other innovations were noiseless electric motors for stealth, highly sensitive navigation instruments and 2 cm anti-aircraft gun turrets. After a short training voyage, on 04.05.1945, the U2540 was scuttled by the crew in the Flensburg Fjord. In 1957 it was raised and served in the Federal German Navy as a test vessel the "Wilhelm Bauer". Today the U2540 can be seen as a museum ship.
