The RMS Titanic has its place in maritime history as not just the largest and most luxurious passenger ship afloat upon its launch in 1912, but also as the most infamous, due to its now legendary maiden voyage.

Built at the Harland and Wolff shipyard in Belfast, the Titanic was commissioned by the White Star Line to be a direct competitor to its newest and most luxurious Atlantic liners. Designed to be unsinkable, with a number of water-tight compartments along the length of her hull, construction of the Titanic was not without its difficulties. Work had to be delayed due to repairs being undertaken on her sister ship, the Olympic, necessitating parts from the Titanic being transferred to the other liner.

The Titanic was designed to herald a new era in cross-Atlantic travel. With previously unheard of luxuries available for its first class passengers, they had access to various baths, a swimming pool, gymnasium, squash court and even a barbers shop was aboard the vessel. For its maiden voyage in April 1912, the cost of a first class ticket was £875 one way, or £64,000 in today's money.

The Titanic departed Southampton on the 10th of April 1912, captained by the experienced Edward J. Smith. She stopped first at Cherbourg, France, then Cobh, Ireland, to pick up further supplies and passengers before then making her way out into the Atlantic on her maiden voyage to New York. The first part of the journey was uneventful, but this was to change at 11:40pm on the night of the 14th of April. Two lookouts spotted a large iceberg directly ahead of the ship and despite frantic orders to change course, the liner was not able to react in time and just 30 seconds later the iceberg tore a gash in the starboard hull of the ship. This in turn popped rivets along the length of the hull hastening the filling of the water-tight compartments. Water rapidly filled the hull and the vessel was doomed.

It became rapidly apparent to the officers on board that there was no chance of saving the ship and at 12:45am, the first of the lifeboats began to be lowered into the water. However, the first boats left barely filled, as the passengers on board, believing the ship to be unsinkable, took some persuasion to abandon the large liner and head for the small wooden lifeboats. By 2:00am, the fact the Titanic was sinking became apparent to all. The stern had risen clean out of the water exposing the propellers and shortly afterwards, the water reached the boat deck. The remaining passengers clung desperately onto the top of the stern to prevent themselves falling into the icy waters, but at 2:20am, the bow and stern separated, with the bow sinking first and the stern following shortly afterwards.

Of the 2224 people aboard the ship, 711 survived and due to the orders given on deck that they should be first to leave, the vast majority of these were first and second class women and children. Just 75 of the 462 third class male passengers survived the sinking. With many families losing their sole breadwinner, there was a large charity drive for the survivors in the aftermath of the sinking.

Much criticism of the White Star Line followed the sinking, as it transpired that there were not enough lifeboats for all of the passengers, but the Titanic had complied with the laws of the period that dictated the number of boats based on tonnage, not on passenger numbers.

The wreck of the Titanic was found by Dr. Robert Ballard in 1985 and now even 100 years after its maiden voyage and tragic loss, the legend of the Titanic continues to hold the imagination of the world.
